The mayors of the metropolis bring land that they control and cede them to the carrier companies of the best projects, after a jury decision which they are members. The call for projects operating in the "open innovation" and is open to all players who wish to invent the city of tomorrow: architects, planners, developers, investors, startups and even civic associations or non governmental communities. They will have the freedom to associate in response to rival groupings of ideas on mixed uses, architecture and urban planning, environmental and social innovation exemplary. Their creativity will rely on citizen participation and expand the functions of mobility, logistics or digital, as well as cultural and sports. This call for projects utilises the talents of all nationalities.----------
Patrick Ollier President of the Grand Paris, presented the broad lines of the international competition to build major projects of Greater Paris. "The 112 candidates selected for metroplolis will not only attract foreign investment and boost economic growth in the metropolis of Ile de France (Paris and Suburbs) but also will have a direct impact on the national level. This will create both the opportunity for a new dynamic by creating jobs, and the momentum of a modern and friendly construction environment, in the stem of the Paris agreement of COP21. "----------
Patrick Ollier answered to my question : "Are the metropolis citizens of Paris Ile de France aware of these gigantic projects, and / or they have concerted and on the next transformation of their living?" ----------
He replies "But obviously, we devoted a large communications budget towards administred because as elected representatives we must consult with our citizens, the people and keep them informed of these changes, I am also Mayor Rueil Malmaison, I know the process citizen consultation " To be continued in Part 2
